SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

Henry W. Hoagland (1912-1995) was born in Colorado Springs, Colorado, and attended Stanford University and Harvard Business School. During World War II he served with the Military Planning Division of the Quartermaster Corps. In 1946 he obtained a job with the Field Service Staff of the Republican National Committee, in which he campaigned for Republican congressmen in marginal districts. During 1947 and 1948 he was Deputy Director of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. In August 1948 he resigned from the Committee to campaign for Republican congressional candidates. After the 1948 election Hoagland obtained a job with the American Research and Development Corporation of Boston, Massachusetts, where he worked for over twenty years. However, he continued to be active in Republican politics, and took frequent leaves of absence from his job to help with Republican campaign work.

Down to 1954 Hoagland continued to assist Republican candidates in marginal districts, particularly in Indiana, Ohio and Colorado. In 1954 he began to work as an advance man for President Eisenhower's campaign trips. In this capacity he would go to cities that the President was planning to visit and make all the local arrangements. He helped arrange for coverage of the visit by local news media. He helped plan the route of the President's motorcade and convinced local businesses to allow their employees to leave work at the time of the motorcade so large crowds could be assembled as the President passed. Hoagland also met with local Republican leaders to determine who would travel with the President or sit with him at local events, a matter of great importance to politicians who hoped to gain recognition by being seen with the President. Hoagland kept extensive notebooks regarding his work as an advance man, and also collected schedules and local newspaper articles about the President's trips. The last trip he planned for Eisenhower was a proposed visit to Liberal, Kansas, in October 1964, after Eisenhower had left the White House. The trip was cancelled at the last minute due to the death of former president Herbert Hoover.

The papers of Henry Hoagland are arranged in two series. The first series consists of a political file relating to his campaign work and his service as an advance man for Dwight D. Eisenhower. This material is arranged chronologically by date of campaign or trip. Events for which especially detailed coverage exists include President Eisenhower's trips to Seattle and Tacoma, Washington, in October 1956, and to the National Corn Picking Contest at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in October 1958. Mamie Eisenhower, who had lived in Cedar Rapids as a child, accompanied him in 1958 and visited the school she had attended, and met with some of her childhood friends, all of which was covered by the Cedar Rapids press. The series also contains an extensive file on the 1984 Republican National Convention that Hoagland attended.

The second series is a subject file. This contains Hoagland's social correspondence; material on his work for the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy; his friendship with various Republican officials, including William J. Casey, Leonard Hall and Thomas E. Stephens; and a small quantity of memorabilia, photographs, and printed material.
